Identity

Artist Statement

A compilation of my insecurities, worries and story. Each of these pieces of work represents a part of mindset, the way I view myself and how I live my life. The first piece of work illustrates dissatisfaction with one's personal appearance. The second piece follows a mix media is a portrayal of one who feels overwhelmed by expectations. The third piece symbolises overthinking. From physical to psychological aspect, they shows progression.

However, the final piece is lighthearted, showing a brief run through of my transition to Hong Kong. The main purpose of this portfolio is to share a piece of me which I would have never been able to put into words for people to hear or read.

To present a message through art making, you must have a clear idea of what they wishes to convey. You must take into account the form, composition, colour, light and so on. Every little detail or element has its value and meanings.

Make-up is used by almost everyone, regardless of age and gender (today's society). However, what are their reasons for putting on make-up? To make themselves attractive? To be like someone else? To cover their flaws? To accentuate their good looks? Some people, after putting on make-up, seem to become a whole different person. Take a different IDENTITY

Social Media

There are many people who have a big following on social media, adored by many. There are many people, especially youths who look up to these people and want to be just like them. Then there are a select few who want everything the other have: fame, riches, etc. Thus, they'll copy & mimic their every action and lifestyle, becoming their copycats rather than an unique individual. They thirst for comments, likes and followers, making it seem like one's following on the internet represents one's overall success.

CONCEPT

Physically taking someone else's face and putting it on oneself

CONCEPT

Scanning another person's face onto yourself

From the kitchen of our family home, there's a window to the room where my great-grandpa lies in his bed. He stays there 24/7 with people entering and leaving every moment. The outside world is still moving about, everything around him except for him. The only variable that doesn't change is him.

A locked box, filled with all kind of things, a treasure waiting to be discovered.

Like our minds, which is filled with thoughts and ideas. However, we cannot disclose everything.

Thus, like a filter, we only allow a certain portion of it out.

When one overthinks, they experience
all kinds of frustrations and headaches
This overthinking can affect the heart
as well as influence one's emotions

The more we think, the more messy
our mind becomes → "expands"

The more painful our heart feels → fish with

Title: Suffocation

A piece which incorporates various materials and subjects to form one being: The mind, heart = body.

- A visual representation of me and my internal 'suffocation'.
↳ Person with low-self esteem ↳ Negative/pessimistic mindset
↳ overthinks constantly. (Vicious circle)

No matter how insignificant the matter is, I'd always overthink, take the issue and twist it into the worst case scenario.

= Habit I can't erase =

The mind is soft yet full of ideas/thoughts
The more you think
↳ the more it grows

The heart
The emotions and feelings
