

Create Your Own Website

As suggested in Part 3: Compiling a Time Capsule, teachers may want to create an on-line version of a time capsule.

Below are some ideas on how that could be done.

1. Use the school website if possible. Using your school website has the advantage of having technical support from an IT person. If each class creates a time capsule page, after a few years there will be a record of popular culture information over a few years. This could then be used for future popular culture units as exemplars and for comparison purposes.
2. <http://www.sites.google.com> – allows classes to create free websites that can be public or private viewing. Templates are available.
3. Microsoft Publisher – has a webpage creation function within the programme.
